None of the Romance of War in THIS Picture

FRENCH PEASANTS BURYING THE GERMAN DEAD—Here we have one of the most striking pictures that have yet come from the battlefields of Western Europe. So rapid was the German retreat from the neighborhood of Meaux that the Germans left hundreds of their comrades where they fell.

Photograph copyright, 1914, by International News Service.

Can you imagine a more powerful argument for international peace than this story of the camera? There are no colors flying in this picture, no cheering crowds, no prancing horses. The brass bands are far ahead somewhere. In full retreat, one of the German armies is now miles distant. Here on the trampled fields of Meaux we see the German dead. THESE are not the SOLDIERS OF THE KAISER, but the FALLEN SONS of brave German MOTHERS. And what a funeral! The army having passed on, elderly French peasants have ventured forth from modest cottages to perform one of the corporal acts of mercy and bury the dead. Study this wonderful picture and say whether the Peace Societies are not right when they plead for disarmament and the settlement of disputes among the nations by an international court.

U. S. ORDERS FOUR WARSHIPS TO VERA CRUZ

Appeal by Foreign Powers to Protect their Interests Cause for Action.

STILL STRIVE FOR PEACE

WASHINGTON, Sept. 26.—Following the decision of the administration to indefinitely postpone the evacuation of Vera Cruz, the Rhode Island, Minnesota and one other battleship have received orders to sail for Vera Cruz at once. This is in addition to the battleship Texas, which sailed for Vera Cruz today.

The entire burden of protecting foreigners of all countries during the new revolution in Mexico will devolve on the United States as a result of the European war. It is understood that Great Britain, Germany and France have already requested this government to protect their citizens in Mexico as far as possible.

The State Department has received a report from Mexico stating that at a conference with the diplomatic corps Carranza said that the revolution would have to continue because of his failure to make peace with Zapata. He did not mention General Villa. It is understood that Zapata and Villa are working in harmony against Carranza.

General Huerta reported to Secretary Garrison today that one of the two wire cables connecting Mexico City in the morning. Present extent of damage to railway not yet fully known. Two of the freight trains have been turned loose, one in each direction, and the situation is up over considerable stretches.

Rebelling officials are in possession of bridges, though such destruction is no real obstacle to the movement of the bridges not destroyed and no resistance offered, and railway officials think they may be able to run trains in three or four days. It is known that destruction of bridges and other facilities is being carried out by the rebels.

Size of force variously estimated from 1,000 to 4,000 men. Caudillo Aguilar has sent 1,000 men, practically all he had at his disposal on trains in that direction. Presumably all he had at his disposal on trains in that direction. He is known that destruction of bridges and other facilities is being carried out by the rebels.

General Ignacio Trevino, acting Secretary of War for Provisional President Carranza, has ordered the north this evening to intercept the possible advance of General Villa's army according to dispatches from Mexico City. While attempting the entering of the town at San Lazaro station a sharpshooters was shot, killing two troops and wounding ten others, including General Trevino.

The Council of War today reported indications against all of the military of the Huerta regime and their extradition will be asked of the United States.

King Alfonso of Spain Starts New Peace Movement

WASHINGTON, Sept. 26.—Another movement to bring peace in Europe has been formally inaugurated by King Alfonso of Spain, who has communicated his plans to the State Department. He also has taken up the subject officially with Italy, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway and the other nations which have remained neutral.

It is believed here that the Spanish king is in a strong position to lead a peace movement in Europe and that his efforts may lead to direct negotiations with the warring powers.

James Brown Scott, a former member of The Hague Tribunal, now secretary of the Carnegie Peace Foundation and member of the State Department Neutrality Board, spent some time at the department today conferring with officials on King Alfonso's plans.

For the present the administration will not make public its views on King Alfonso's movement or any plan it has in contemplation by itself or in combination with the others.

FIND LOST BAG WITH $18,000 JEWELS SAFE

Poor Immigrant Discovers Dressing Case in Depression on Summer Street Extension.

PROPERTY OF NEWPORTER

The $18,000 worth of jewels lost Thursday in Boston by Mrs. Harold Brown of Newport, R. I., was found yesterday.

The leather dressing bag containing the jewels was picked up on Summer street extension, in South Boston, not far from the Hamburg American dock, by the driver of an immigrant barge, Florentine Dirio, of No. 6 Cleveland place.

The bag with its valuable contents had evidently been jostled from Mrs. Brown's automobile by a depression in the paving. It was first sighted by a young Italian immigrant, who had been on American soil an hour.

He and the barge driver and Special Officer Joseph Carvagno of the North End station will probably share in the $1,000 reward advertised by the detective agency in behalf of Mrs. Brown.

Mrs. Brown and party had just landed from the Canopic on Thursday. In the rush and crush of inspection and identification of baggage, Mrs. Brown placed her traveling bag containing her toilet articles and jewels case with other small baggage in the front of her automobile. On the ride

CHIEF 'POOLS' ALL THE CLUBS ROCKLAND

Including One of Which All the Selectmen—His Bosses—Are Members.

AND OH! WHAT HE FOUND!

The town of Rockland could talk about nothing last night except the afternoon appearance of Chief of Police M. E. Stewart in a wonderful imitation of Ajax defying the lightning.

Chief Stewart rallied Eagle Hall, home of the Order of Eagles, and carried away a wagon load of joy water.

The chief works for Selectmen "Jim" Cody, "Bill" Barry and Arthur Thompson and here's the shock and horror of it—all three Selectmen are members of the Eagles.

The head constable made a clean-up of it. He raided Hotel Thomas and the Rockland House. Then he called with search warrants on the Rockland, the Foresters and the Sons of St. George.

Job wagons were driven from club-houses to the lock-up loaded to the gunwales. This was Chief Stewart's catch.

Beer 1,442 bottles
Ale 698 bottles
Whisky 191 pints
Rum, brandy, gin and wine in various small quantities.

The Rockland police are more disturbed about the raid than might otherwise be the case because of the fact that today had been widely advertised as Rockland's No License Sunday, in connection with the national prohibition movement of the anti-liquor.

All the Protestant congregations of the town today in a great prohibition rally at the Congregational Church in Union street. The address will be delivered by the Rev. E. J. Richardson, a Virginian.

Official War Statements

FRENCH.
PARIS, Sept. 26.—11 P. M.—The following official statement was issued tonight:

The enemy has attacked along the whole front. He has been repulsed everywhere. On our left wing we are making progress. On the heights of the Meuse the situation is not changing. In Woerwe we continue to gain ground.

The following official statement was issued at 3 o'clock this afternoon:

1.—On our left wing the battle continues with great violence between the Somme and Oise. Between the Oise and Soissons (on the Aisne) our troops have made some slight progress. The enemy has not attempted any attack.

2.—At the center, from Rheims to Verdun, the situation is unchanged. In the Woerwe region the enemy succeeded in crossing the Meuse in the vicinity of St. Mihiel, but the offensive taken by our troops has already thrown back the greater part across the river. At the south of the Woerwe our attacks have not ceased to progress. The Fourteenth German Corps has been thrown back after suffering heavy losses.

3.—On our right wing (Lorraine and Vosges) the German offensive seems to have been reduced. Some statements, which had attacked our advance posts at certain points, have been repulsed by the entry into action of our reserves. The Russians have captured Rzesow, on the railroad leading to Cracow, and the two fortified positions to the north and to the south of Przemysl. In Posen the Germans appear to be fortifying themselves south of Kalisz.

GERMAN.
BERLIN (via Amsterdam), Sept. 26.—The following official statement was issued today:

Following repeated attacks on our troops along the Oise by the enemy, who seems to have been strongly reinforced, we took the offensive and drove the French back twelve miles. Fighting continues on the western end of the opposing line.

Along the Meuse, southeast of Verdun, we have gained the heights on the east bank. The French opposed our advance there with fresh troops and the fighting was severe. We continue to advance, while our artillery maintains its bombardment of the French forts.

Report from sources friendly to the allies indicate that the Germans, in strengthening their endangered right wing, have dangerously weakened their center and their left, in the Vosges Lorraine region. There is heavy fighting at the French left, and a long-range artillery duel is in progress in the center with the allies holding the better positions, according to late cable dispatches.

The German losses in eight weeks of war, according to a Berlin official statement, are 73,240 killed, wounded and missing. Prolonged reports that the Russians occupy Chyrow, giving them control of all railways in east and east-central Galicia. Pryn also has been captured after severe fighting. The outer forts of Przemyel have been captured by Russians.

GERMANS REPULSED ALL ALONG THE LINE, LATE REPORTS SAY

Paris and London Official Announcements Tell of Successes for Allies in Great Battle in France; Germans Take Fort Camp de Romains, South of Verdun

Official announcements from London and Paris state that the Germans were repulsed all along the great battle-line in France yesterday. The statements follow:

PARIS, Sept. 26, 11 p. m.—The enemy has attacked along the whole front. He has been repulsed everywhere. On our left wing we are making progress. On the heights of the Meuse the situation is not changing.

In Woerwe we continue to gain ground. On our right wing the battle continues with great violence between the Somme and Oise. Between the Oise and Soissons (on the Aisne) our troops have made some slight progress.

England's determination to wage war to the finish is again emphasized in a statement by King George and Lord Kitchener, of an army of 150,000 men at Aldershot. This new force, it is said, will soon be fighting with the allies in France.

The Hague dispatches state that the Dutch-German frontier is closed in a state of siege for the better preservation of Holland's neutrality.

A Milan, Italy, dispatch says that a French hydro-aeroplane from one of the warships dropped bombs on the Austrian forts at Cattaro and escaped unhurt.

It is believed in London that British troops, which have borne the brunt of the defensive fighting for the allies, will now be shifted to the vicinity of St. Mihiel to help hurt back the invaders about Verdun.

SCHOOLS WILL GOVERN EVERY CITY ELECTION

Crowded Conditions and Dilatory Tactics of City Government to Force Issue in December.

The crowded school accommodations in Everett has aroused the residents of that city that it will be an issue in the city election in December when members of the Board of Aldermen and City Council come up for election.

For over eight years this school question has been up for consideration by both branches of the city government and the school authorities and for eight years the citizens have got no action until last year when the city was obliged to appropriate $225,000 for three big school buildings that can be used until next year and now need $7,000 for portable school houses while it is waiting.

Superintendent of Schools Whitney declared: "I have school children in every conceivable place in Everett and even then twelve first grades and two second grades are running on half time, and they do the same thing last year. The conditions surrounding these children in a number of cases are not just what they should be, but the State inspectors are 'Little Devils'."

CRITICISM SLOW. Superintendent Whitney declared that the members of the City Council were pretty slow in meeting the situation. He says one local paper even now says there is no need for better schools and more buildings.

The school opened this year in Everett is 1,230. The population is upwards of 25,000. The enrollment of school children this year is 450 more than last year. At the High School 332 students enrolled on Monday, more than ever before in the history of the school.

In the Mr. Washington section of the city, a residential section, the residents have been agitating better school accommodations for two years.

Frank Carpenter has made it an issue at every meeting of the City Council and has been one of the leaders for an appropriation that would take care of the situation.

According to Superintendent of Schools Whitney, two rooms in the residence known as the Wilmett House are being used as school rooms. The city has purchased the house for $15,000 and a lot of work and money has been given to it by Albert N. Parlin. Here one of the three school buildings will be erected and will be known as the Parlin school.

The other two new buildings will be erected in East and West Everett.

Trouble over selecting suitable sites for the buildings; long discussions over proper plans and policies are charged by many as the cause for the conditions now existing in the school situation.

RESCUE TWO IN BOAT EXPLOSION

Motor Craft Blows Up as South Boston Men Are Taken Away from Danger.

A hazardous rescue of two men in a blazing motorboat was effected yesterday by George S. McDuffie of No. 209 Whitley street, Winthrop, and Stephen Anderson, also of Winthrop. The rescued men, Edward Wilson and Edward W. of South Boston, had started from the South Boston Yacht Club for Beachmont to be joined by friends.

The big motorboat caught fire off Port Heath, two miles from Winthrop Crest, and forty-two gallons of gasoline soon made things hot for them.

They halted a passing sailboat in vain. Finally their plight was noticed by Mr. McDuffie and Anderson, who put out to their rescue in another motorboat. A crowd watched the rescue party with anxiety. Just as they were about to take the terrified men from the burning boat, the gasoline tank blew up with a roar, sending the boat craft to the harbor bottom. Wilson, who owned the boat, lost his clothing, $25 in cash, and a gold watch as he tried to extricate his flames. He had to borrow carfare back to town.

ETHEL ROOSEVELT Derby Sails to Nurse Wounded in France

NEW YORK, Sept. 26.—Mrs. Ethel Roosevelt, who sailed for France today to nurse the wounded soldiers in France, she accompanied her husband, Dr. Derby, who will attach himself to the staff of a Paris hospital.

When Dr. and Mrs. Derby went to their cabin they found a mysterious package, which upon being opened was found to contain a miniature of Dr. Derby's mother.

It being a rare reading, the couple spent some time looking at it before going to bed.

Bergers Freed on Auto Death Charge

The manslaughter charge against Assessor Eric Bergers of Quincy, whose automobile fatally ran over seven-year-old Paul Balmori in Cambridge, North Abington, on August 26, was dismissed by Judge Kelly in the District Court today.

Evidence was submitted by the assistant district attorney that Bergers stopped his car and tried to help the child.

Thunder and blitzen! Vat a happenstance! It looked as though somebody was mobilizing half the frankfurters.

One of the fiercest rumors of war atrocities which spread about the horrified city last night had it that the Kaiser had ordered the armed forces to dine at the restaurants and cafés. The rumor had subtracted one of the frankfurters from each order of frankfurter and potato salad.

As everybody knows, the EF. & P. S. has included two frankfurters and a sufficiency of potato salad. The report was that only one frankfurter was now passed out with each order.

Others blamed the high cost of war. Others said it was the Frankfurter Trust. Still others blamed the Kaiser. What General Sherman said about war was bitterly repeated.

A reporter scouted along Der Sommerstrasse where one of the Waldorf Speisezimmer located is. Der Boss explained quickly:

"Nobody loses. We used to serve two frankfurters with the potato salad for twenty cents. Now we serve one frankfurter but charge only fifteen cents. A nickel off for the one less—an even break."

Time Required to Uproot Old System and Plant the New, Explains Richard McGhee.

HORDE OF OFFICIALS TO GO

Countless Details to Be Disposed of Before Sun Shines on Real Irish Parliament.

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN.

"Why has the operation of home rule been postponed for a year?"

That is the question which is being asked back to Ireland for national parliament, why don't they get down to business right away and organize the Irish parliament?"

"Why do the Irish leaders—Redmond and Dillon at their head—not hurry on in the postponement, but actually welcome it?"

There are but a few of the questions of like nature which are now on the lips of many less of those who are throughout this country, in Canada and Australia, everywhere, in fact, where friends of home rule reside.

I put these questions myself yesterday to Mr. Richard McGhee, M. P. for Tyrone, who is in Boston just now on a brief but busy visit. I could not have put them to a better man. There are many able men in the Irish Parliamentary party, orators like Redmond and Devlin and T. P. O'Connor, powerful debaters and organizers like John Dillon, Swift, Mr. Neill, Stephen Gwynne, William Redmond, and a score of others. I have to say that among those brilliant and successful leaders of the cause of the greatest political movement of modern times, I did not meet one who seemed to me so large a figure as the one of clear, convincing statement that is owned by Mr. McGhee. One cannot afford to miss anything when Mr. McGhee is talking, either on the platform or in conversation. It is as if he were a great man, as a great lawyer would say his facts before a jury, as a business leader would submit a costly proposition to his board of directors.

Wherever Mr. McGhee speaks while he is in Boston or in the vicinity, every man and woman who is interested in the New Ireland should try to hear him. His meetings are open.

When I put my questions to Mr. McGhee yesterday in his room at the Hotel Lenox, he made the following reply:

ONLY ENEMY OBJECT.

The home rule bill, when it was first introduced, caused a great deal of trouble. The date of the bill coming into operation within eight months from the close of the session in which it was finally passed into law. But Mr. Redmond saw many difficulties in the way of bringing it into force at once, and a dispensing power was given to the British ministry to either bring it into operation seven months earlier or seven months later than the appointed day.

The objection to postponement is only raised by the enemies of home rule or by factious men, while objecting to a delay of twelve months, now that the bill has become law, did not object to the total defeat of home rule in 1913 when the House of Lords rejected the bill which the House of Commons passed in that year. The Irish Parliamentary party, under their capable leader, Mr. Redmond, who won home rule in spite of faction, is satisfied with the postponement and no one else has any authority from the Irish people to speak on the matter.

"There is nothing to alarm anybody in the postponement of the home rule act for a year. It is not done for mere purposes of delay. The postponement is entirely responsible for that postponement. This was made clear by the action of the British ministry, which, led by its leader, walked out of the House of Commons and refused to vote for it."

"The work of transferring about fifty-five departments of the civil service from the Bank of Ireland, to the new Irish House of Commons, will be a task which will not be completed in a few days, and the postponement of the act will come into operation in time to enable the Irish Government, in concert with our Irish leaders to make the necessary preparations for relieving the present set of officials of their responsibilities and handing them over to the control of the National party."

"I need many practical details have to be worked out, such for instance, as taking over on terms to be negotiated, from the Bank of Ireland, the old Irish House of Commons on College Green, or, if that cannot be

BOSTON TAKES UP ZIONIST PROBLEM

Jews to Hear Brandeis and Levin at Mass Meeting Tonight.

Four hundred thousand young Jews are fighting in the armies of warring Europe.

The worthy fortunes of perhaps 100,000 other Jews are threatened. If they have not been dissipated by the war.

Many of these European Jews have been the principal support of the Zionist movement. Berlin has been its headquarters. London its bank.

The task of carrying on the Palestine movement has therefore, fallen suddenly upon the shoulders of American Jews, who have assumed their obligations with characteristic American courage. Tonight the Jews of Greater Boston will assemble in Symphony Hall, where, beginning at 8 o'clock, a great mass meeting will be addressed by Louis D. Brandeis and Dr. B. Levin.

BRANDIS CHAIRMAN.

Dr. Levin enjoys the distinction of being the first Jew ever elected to public office in Russia. He was a member of the first Duma.

The movement of the Jews to make for themselves a nation is one of many splendid enterprises disapproved by the European war.

The crucial work of seventeen years, in the task of making Palestine self-dependent, has been undertaken and to meet the emergency a provisional international organization has been formed.

EXPECT BIG THROWN.

Tonight's big Zionist meeting will discuss the present situation of the Zionist movement and consider ways and means. It is not unlikely that the direct effect of the war, Mr. Brandeis says, has been felt quite as much in Palestine as in any of the actual areas of the war.

Arrangements have been made for an overflow meeting at Jordan Hall, which will also be addressed by the speakers named above.

"Buy-a-Bale" Plan Steadily Gaining Impetus as Orders Continue to Pour In.

The Governor of Massachusetts enrolled yesterday in the Buy-a-Bale-of-Cotton movement.

Another important enrollment was that of the Mayor of Boston.

The most recent of the ex-Governors subscribed to the cause.

So did the newest ex-Mayor.

David I. Walsh, Mayor of Boston and former Mayor Fitzgerald bought each a bale of cotton.

Former Governor Foss subscribed for five bales.

Mr. Lewis R. Joselyn, treasurer of the C. E. Osogood Company, a business man known everywhere in Northern New England, sent a check for one hundred dollars and asked two bales.

The Thomson-Crocker Shoe Company, operating one of the largest shoe manufacturing establishments in Boston telegraphed to the Chamber of Commerce in twenty leading cities in the Southern cotton belt asking each organization to buy a bale of cotton and to draw on the firm in payment.

The Thomson-Crocker Shoe Company, operating one of the largest shoe manufacturing establishments in Boston telegraphed to the Chamber of Commerce in twenty leading cities in the Southern cotton belt asking each organization to buy a bale of cotton and to draw on the firm in payment.

Some of the leading representatives of the firm also bought bales of cotton, for themselves and others on the firm's account.

Buy a bale of cotton at ten cents the pound—fifty dollars a bale—and you help the cotton growers of the South from financial disaster. A nation-wide movement will keep the price of cotton from falling to ten cents. After the war—cotton will sell considerably higher. Meanwhile your bale of cotton will be put away for you.

The Buy-a-Bale-of-Cotton movement was inaugurated by the Atlanta Georgian. Mr. Hearst's newspaper in the South. It is sweeping the country. The fact that those who come patriotically to the help of our Southern brothers may also realize a profit is to do so will join Mr. Hearst's "Buy-a-bale-of-cotton" movement.

NEWEST FASHION: GO WEST, OLD MAN

Fitzgerald (J. F.) Gets Some Advice From Major Spaulding of Santa Monica.

Major Frank Spaulding of Santa Monica, Cal., made vigorous protest at Young's last night against the equatorial Boston weather of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

The major retired his complaint with former Mayor Fitzgerald, whom he buttonholed in the lobby of the hotel.

"Fitz," said the Californian, to the former Mayor, "you must be fit to go west. When I sold paper in Boston, the city had four kinds of weather every day. Now you seem to get in a stupor of unchangeable heat that lasts three days. I think there must be politics in it, and if I'm right Boston politics has gone bad. Why, when I managed William A. Russell's campaign for Congress—William A. you know, not William E.—no administration would have dared to serve such weather late in September."

"What I have to suffer here this week on a business trip is just brief. When I sold paper in Boston, the city had four kinds of weather every day. Now you seem to get in a stupor of unchangeable heat that lasts three days. I think there must be politics in it, and if I'm right Boston politics has gone bad. Why, when I managed William A. Russell's campaign for Congress—William A. you know, not William E.—no administration would have dared to serve such weather late in September."

"But, Major," interrupted Fitz, "you've got me wrong. I'm not the Mayor. I'm just a newspaper man."

"That's not," queried the Westerner. "We hadn't heard about it out in California. The boys will be surprised."

"A remarkable man," Mr. Fitzgerald said as Major Spaulding moved away. "He's a newspaper man. He's a newspaper man. He's a newspaper man."

MAYOR CURLEY SENDS GREEK AND LAUDS THE MOVEMENT.

Editor of the Boston American:—William Brandeis and Hearst's "Buy-a-bale-of-cotton" plan to save our Southern cotton growers is one of the most common-sense business propositions advanced for the protection of American industries since the present European war-depression started.

Enclosed please find my check for fifty dollars in payment for one bale of cotton, which carries with it my earnest thanks for the privilege of co-operating with my fellow Americans through the nation toward the relief of our Southern neighbors.

Guard Against the Speculators: "Rooters" to Be Taken Care of; Give Box Holders Preference.

By NICK FLATLEY.

Boston is in the grip of a wild epidemic of baseball fever. The coming world series, with the Braves against the champions of the American League for the championship of the world, has stirred the greatest baseball city in the country to the heights of enthusiasm heretofore never reached, not even when the Red Sox fought the Athletics two years ago.

Time of all actual time-bearing applications for the world's series tickets has delayed the Boston National League headquarters. Every man, woman and child in New England is ardently waiting to see the Braves try to wrest the crown from the champion Athletics.

Everybody will have an even chance. Tickets will be given to applicants in the order applications are received.

There will be no favoritism. Season box holders will naturally be given the preference for box seats, but for everything else it will be a clear-cut first-come, first-served.

The first applicant will receive the first tickets.

There will be more than 32,000 seats at every game played at Fenway Park, but unless present individuals or prima facie evidence for the time when the promotions start, there will be a lot of disappointed fans.

But the management of the Braves are well wadded with the season tickets. The postmark as used by the Braves will have their seats at the time when the promotions start, there will be a lot of disappointed fans.

A greatly enlarged office force is hard at work getting the thousands of letters already at hand in order. When they come will be filed immediately.

TAKE CARE OF "ROOTERS."

The Royal Rooters, who were frozen out at the next to the last place in the historic Red Sox-Giants clash of 1912, will have their seats at the time when the promotions start, there will be a lot of disappointed fans.

The following will be the scale of prices:

Box seats—Five dollars ($5). Pavilion seats—Three dollars ($3). Left field stand—Two dollars ($2). Right field stand (near first base)—Two dollars ($2). Centerfield bleachers—One dollar ($1).

Excepting the dollar seats, all seats will be reserved.

After the applications have been filed and numbered, and the seating capacity of Fenway Park O. K'ed by the National Commission, cards will be sent out to the successful. They will bear the number of the seats and the sum of money necessary to get them.

Incidentally, money sent with applications will be returned.

Several days before the first Boston game the Braves have offered will be opened. Tickets for various sections will be allotted to separate groups, and the order of seating will be determined.

Persons presenting cards, and the money called for by these cards—no more than $5—will be handed the tickets after signing for them.

The list of all streets will be carefully kept, to obviate, if possible, any speculation in tickets.

SEVEN SEATS.

Whether or not tickets will be issued for single games, or for the entire series, with cash returned in case the number purchased is not taken, is still to be determined by the National Commission.

The door seats will be "rush" seats. There will be no advance sale whatever. The offices will open early on the day of the sale, and the entrances will be so arranged that there will be no chance to buy tickets and then retreat.

After receiving the tickets, the purchaser thereof must enter the park.

The date of the opening game is yet undecided, though general opinion seems to fix it at October 3. This as well as the capacity of spectators will be decided within a few days at the annual world's Series meeting of the National Commission at New York.

MILDRED SULLIVAN, PRETTIEST GIRL IN AROOSTOOK, MISSING

HOULTON, Me., Sept. 26.—The friends of Mildred L. Sullivan, seventeen-year-old, who has been missing from her home here since September 4, are alarmed over a report that the girl is dangerously ill in a nearby city. Miss Sullivan is known as the "prettiest girl in Aroostook."

Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Sullivan, have not been able to find out where their daughter is and believe that the story of her illness is one of many started by the press.

The girl was last seen at the Presque Isle fair on September 4 and was rooming with a Mrs. Silas Southard at Presque Isle. The police, who have been called in upon the case, are now trying to run down a report that on the day she left the Southard house the girl was working in Bangor.

The girl's father, who is very ill in Presque Isle and is in the home of Mrs. Sullivan, came in town on the afternoon of Wednesday of last week and met his daughter. She was with a strange girl to whom she introduced her father. He asked, "Isn't she a French girl?"

His daughter replied, "Yes, and she's very nice."

While Miss Sullivan was in the Southard home, she was in the stable in her room much of the time.

Broken Main Floods Leather District

Traffic in the leather district was paralyzed yesterday afternoon for more than an hour when the leather water main burst at the corner of South and Beach streets, throwing the water to the elevated structure, a distance of thirty feet.

The rushing water flooded Beach street from Kingston street to Atlantic avenue and caused an immense degree of congestion. The water rose to level with the sidewalk, but did not overflow into surrounding cellars.

Pry Joint in Place to Cure Lameness

That nearly three-quarters of all cases of lameness of the back are due to displacement of the sacrospinous joint, and that the ailment may be corrected by skillfully prying the joint into place, using the leg as a lever, was the declaration of Dr. George Taylor, last evening at a meeting of the Massachusetts Association of Physicians for the study of the Thoracic. He demonstrated his theory.

The superintendent of schools in Marlborough, Lynn, Braintree, Salem and other places will hold special peace exercises on this same day.

On many of the schools President Wilson's proclamation for Peace Day, October 2, will be read. This is the day which will be largely observed as Peace Day among the churches.

The Congressional ministers of Greater Boston, in co-operation with ministers of other denominations will hold a mass peace meeting in Faneuil Hall on the afternoon of October 2.

"Pope Benedict the XV" bowed, and great tact in dispensing with the ancient solemnity attending the coronation. The ceremony took place three days after his election, so as to enable the pope to receive his homesick subjects. The coronation took place in the historic Sistine Chapel. It was a memorable and historic occasion. By his side, many belonging to the various nations were seated. There were cardinals sitting close by, many belonging to the various cities that at that moment were suffering the dire ravages of the war. It was a touching sight. Each cardinal had his native banner waving confidently and proudly within his bosom, there was a exterior dignity and charity as only the Catholic church can offer to a perfect brotherhood in faith without surrendering in the least to the allurements of the world, and self-sacrificing patriotism, each toward his native land.

MANIFESTS GREAT WISDOM
 "The choice of Cardinal della Chiesa to fill the highest post of honor and of jurisdiction in the world has already produced a most favorable impression and manifests the great wisdom and prudence that marked the deliberations of the cardinals in conclave. At this particular time there is great need of a young, vigorous

"Trained in the College of Ecclesiastical Nobles, he distinguished himself in his first post in the Nunciature of Madrid, where he wound under the eyes of the king and the pope to the rank of ambassador in Spain. Later, when Cardinal Rampolla had been created papal secretary of state under Leo XIII, he remembered the tireless auditor of the king and called him to Rome to occupy the most influential position in that department of the secretariate of state that is mainly concerned with the diplomatic relation of the Holy See with the governments of the world. For most of his years, and the practical experience of affairs and the intimate knowledge of statesmen and churchmen he there acquired were of great value to him."

"Seven years ago he was appointed ambassador in Rome, and last year in Italy as archbishop of the historic diocese of Bologna, and he has been the author of the fruits of a splendid mind and FACES GREAT PROBLEM.

 "The present time is a most trying one in which to begin the arduous labors of pontiff, and Pope Benedict XV. will at the very outset of his pontificate be called on to face as serious and as difficult a problem as ever fell to the lot of a sovereign pontiff, but in his labors he will have the prayers and co-operation of all the bishops, priests and people throughout the world, and from no section of the world will greater support, deeper affection and more lasting loyalty

"On my arrival in Rome, just a bare hour or two after the Holy Father had been elected, I went immediately to the Vatican and sought out the new pontiff to offer him the homage and devotion of myself, the priests and people of the archdiocese of Boston. He was still in the small room that was allotted to him as his dwelling during the conclave, surrounded by a number of friends.

"On three separate occasions during my short stay in Rome the Holy Father received me in private conference, and I was amazed with the wonderful qualities he displayed. His ready and quick grasp of affairs, his intimate knowledge of men and conditions, his gracious tact and courtly bearing, his manifest love and burning Scientific examination of the eye by appointment at desire. Consultation Free. If you are suffering from blurred vision, headache, eye strain, or any other eye trouble, etc., you can obtain relief by consulting one of our skilled optometrists. Perhaps you may wear eyeglasses at all; if so there will be no need of removing them. If not, it is best to worry about your eyes.

A Mammoth Establishment

A well known exponent of optometry says:

If you cannot do this it is proof that either one or both eyes are defective or that you are now wearing incorrect glasses. In either case you require the immediate attention of an optometrist. If you can qualify on these eye tests and are troubled with headaches, eye strain may be the cause.

The glasses will tell the story of health and disease. A complete examination of the eyes is a vital signpost to the body.

Dr. A. B. Hammer, "I look to examine the eyes of my patients. I find out what is wrong with the body before it is too late. No poverty stricken glasses."

The question is often asked: "How can I tell if my eyes are healthy?" Here's the answer: Wilson Bros. devote their entire business to the eye department, and now have eight opticians.

REVIEW OF REAL ESTATE MARKET OF PAST WEEK

Decreased Demand for Real Estate Due to Tightness of Money Market.

MARKET IS FEATURELESS

The real estate market during the past week passed through one of the most featureless periods of trade of which it has ever known. Transfers of all kinds of property, from suburban dwellings to downtown commercial structures, showed a marked decline.

While the hot weather and Jewish holidays may have had some effect in keeping down activity in real estate, the biggest obstacle with which real estate brokers had to contend was the tightness of the money market.

In a number of cases where the price of a property had been agreed upon, and a prospective purchaser was ready to sign agreement papers, difficulty in procuring a mortgage at reasonable terms put a stop to the transaction.

Since the decline of the week the condition of the money market has been somewhat unsettled. The Federal Reserve banks and trust companies, which are said to have been buying up bonds, are said to be waiting for a chance to sell them, and the market is said to be in a state of suspense.

DISPOSITION NATIONAL.
This condition is not in itself a very serious one, but it is a factor in the real estate market. It is a factor in the real estate market, and it is a factor in the real estate market.

Only one sale of any consequence was reported during the week. It was the sale of the property at 1000 North Street, Boston, by the late Mr. J. M. Smith, to the late Mr. J. M. Smith.

RECENT SALES.
The only sale of any consequence was the sale of the property at 1000 North Street, Boston, by the late Mr. J. M. Smith, to the late Mr. J. M. Smith.

To Spend an Autumn Day Profitably and Pleasantly

Go to the Country, Look for a Good Place to Build and Live

Today is a complete day of rest for all. We advise our readers to spend the day outside of the city, to wander about in the suburbs, near or far, FAR enough for real country, NEAR enough for city work combined with country living.

All days in the country are beautiful—the country is man's natural home, the city is a hideous, abnormal dwelling place, especially for children. The days now are especially beautiful in the country, long walks are agreeable. Go out, and walk, and look about, AND, IF YOU CAN, BUY A PIECE OF GROUND FOR A HOME.

It will not be the fault of the Boston AMERICAN if the readers fail to invest part of their savings in carefully chosen real estate. Many, unfortunately, will invest foolishly. Many will be deluded by false promises, but a great majority of those that use their intelligence and buy real estate now, NOT TOO FAR FROM THE CITY, will live to see a very great financial profit, as well as a very great profit in health for themselves and their children.

Much real estate can be bought now at low prices. Present conditions have affected prices in all directions—in real estate as well as in stocks. Many men that bought land and intended to hold it for a great increase in value have been pinched in the money market, they are unable to hold their land and they must sell it for the price they can get. That is the opportunity of the careful purchaser.

When we advise our readers to buy real estate we have not so much in mind the almost certain FINANCIAL profit AS THE WELFARE OF CHILDREN BROUGHT UP IN THE COUNTRY. The average American father and mother make every possible sacrifice for their children. There is no sacrifice as important, none that means so much to the children, as the sacrifice that the father makes when he goes out of town, puts up with the inconveniences of the commuter, walks, if necessary, to and from the station. It is difficult for men to realize what country life means for children, unless they have watched in growing children the difference between city life and country life.

And it is difficult for men to realize what living in the country will do for THEM AS WELL AS FOR THEIR CHILDREN unless they have actually tried it. The time in going to and from need not be wasted. Every man needs a certain amount of time for planning, for thinking things out ahead. The intelligent man uses his hours of travel in thought and for reading as well.

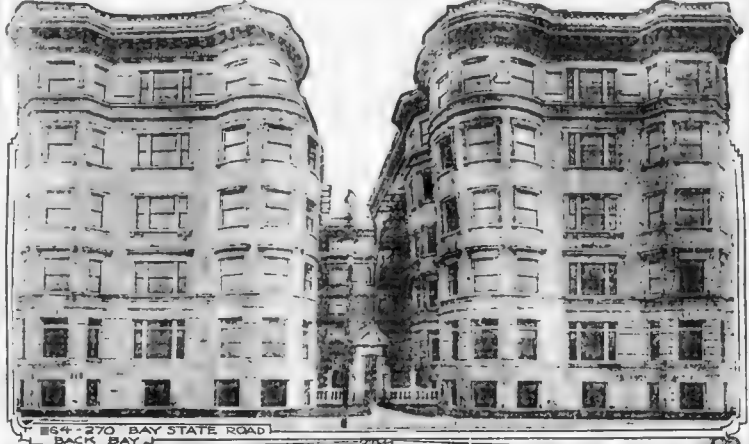

The facilities of travel are constantly improving, electric transportation, STILL IN ITS INFANCY, is conquering distance more and more. The land that you go and look at tomorrow or next day CANNOT DECREASE IN VALUE if you buy it on any kind of a fair basis. And the greater part of it must increase enormously. Look at real estate cautiously. Make sure, first of all, THAT YOU CAN ACTUALLY LIVE ON THE LAND THAT YOU BUY. Walk from the station to the land if you expect to walk when you live there.

Try the trolley if you expect to use the trolley. Buy enough land for two houses if you can, we always insist upon that. You put your house upon one piece of ground, and the other you can use for a garden, a playground and a working ground for your children. Why are you grown the increased value of that piece of ground OUGHT TO PAY FOR YOUR HOUSE AND BOTH PIECES OF GROUND PUT TOGETHER. The land owner, the HOME OWNER, is the best citizen. He has an interest in government that the mere payer of rent cannot have. And, what is important, HE OWNS HIS PIECE OF THE UNITED STATES. He is independent of every landlord once he has paid out his money—he has a roof and a home, something permanent that he can call his own.

How the Exquisite, Extravagant
"Queens of Paris" Have Foresworn
All Their Luxuries to Nurse
the Battling Soldiers of France

PARIS has been famous mainly for its fashions and its frivolous beauties. The war has destroyed its fashion, but it has turned its beauties into real heroines. Behold, then, these idols of the boulevards—exquisite ladies whose extravagance smacked of Babylon and the Rome of the Caesars, and whose luxuries were greater than those of many queens—casting aside all frivolity, throwing around themselves the cloak of the nurse, and in the place of decorations of diamonds and precious stones adorning themselves with the Red Cross.

Of all the twenty superlative beauties and the twenty dozen comparative ones, not a beauty but has enlisted to care for the soldiers of France. The hands

"Colombine, her frivolities forgotten, dons the Red Cross. Harlequin is ready for the war—Even Pierrot is in arms!"

Mlle. Renouard, the French Beauty, Who Has Thrown Off Her Diamonds for the Red Cross.

Mlle. Dorgere, the "Most Beautiful Dancer in Paris," Who Has Thrown Off Her Diamonds for the Red Cross.

that kings, princes, grand dukes and millionaires have held are tying bandages on the wounded peasant. And the ones that cost potentates fortunes to gaze upon the "pious-poor" looks deeply into for nothing. If one considers what these charming ladies have given up one sees the extent of their heroism. There is, for instance, Mlle. Arlette Dorgere. Mlle. Dorgere is known as the most beautiful blonde in Paris, and the Grand Duke Boris of Russia was extremely smitten by her—smitten so much that the jewels he gave her were worth a quarter of a million dollars. Mlle. Dorgere has exquisite apartments that are furnished with the most expensively authentic furniture of the time of the Fourteenth Louis. The bed she sleeps upon actually held the form of the hapless Marie Antoinette, she was the glory of the Capucins.

Mlle. Dorgere was not always in the lap of luxury. She began life as the daughter of a waiter in a little Parisian restaurant. At twelve she went on the stage. At twenty she was a star and the idol of the grand duke. Such is the reward of industry.

Perhaps it is these lowly beginnings which have enabled her to find courage to give up all things and minister to the pathetic sons of France without pay.

There is Mlle. Renouard, who runs at least even with Mlle. Dorgere as a reigning beauty. Mlle. Renouard's extravagances lay chiefly in dresses. She never wore the same one twice, and the least of her gowns costs hundreds of francs. Her specially woven Korean silk stockings sometimes cost her five hundred dollars a pair.

And Mlle. Renouard is working among the hospital cots in the sober nurse's garb, and she thinks the Red Cross more beautiful than any creation of the Rue de la Paix she has ever had.

Then there is the stately Mona Dela. The King of Spain thought Mlle. Dela the most exquisite actress he had ever seen, and the King had seen many. Seven years ago she was earning three dollars a week as a little milliner's girl. Yesterday she was connoisseur of the most exquisite luxuries, and nothing was too extravagant for her. She prided herself upon the fact that she never put her feet on the pavement. She had, in fact, six automobiles.

Now the six automobiles are somewhere at the French front, carrying French soldiers. And Mlle. Dela's feet grow weary.

Mlle. Greuze is another of the beauties of the first class who has taken up the nurse's dress and duties. Mlle. Greuze prides herself particularly upon her resemblance to the charming girl of the paintings of the famous artist Greuze. Her greatest extravagance has been jewels. She wears the necklace of the Pompadour, the bracelets of Katherine the Great and the earrings of Cleopatra. Mlle. Greuze has declared that she will give up every jewel she possesses for the defense of France. And she also is nursing.

So, too, is Mlle. Ida Rubenstein, for love of whom the poet D'Annunzio almost killed himself. Mlle. Rubenstein was as extravagant as any of the others. She depended more upon real genius than upon a fortunate combination of features, but her ministrations are none the less welcome to the soldiers, even though she may not be as beautiful as some of the other exquisite nurses.

And these are but few of many. Colombine has shed her lightness and has become a real woman. And her immortal partners, Harlequin and Pierrot, have shouldered gun and are off to the war.

For, after all, if there should be no France, or if France should be changed beyond recognition, there would be no more famous queens of beauty in Paris. And, after all, too, are not the kings and potentates too busy fighting to buy pearls and diamonds as tribute to surpassing love-lies?

So perhaps Colombine is very wise in taking up the Red Cross. Certainly she does it well.

To Be Beautiful for "The 400"

How the Ambitious Bruguieres Spent Millions to Get Into Newport and Lost Millions Getting Out When Perfectly Gorgeous Sister-in-Law Appeared

Newport, September 22

IS IT possible for a woman to be too beautiful? Can a person be a cure rather than a blessing? Some of the most famous people in Newport, but now of Paris, this question. And that handsome, dark-eyed mother or Louis le Grand, Pedar and Emil sighed and said:

"Yes, indeed. We as a family have been cursed by too great a beauty. It was not ours by birth; it married into the family, alas, and our sorrow has been many."

Which means that the Bruguieres family have found that the rare and striking beauty possessed by Mrs. Pedar Bruguieres has been a great drawback to their own social ambitions. It is a very interesting, a very moving tale, this tale of the Bruguieres, and how they almost won, then entirely lost Newport. They would have won hands down, had it not been for Mrs. Pedar's fatal beauty.

In their struggling journey from the Pacific Coast to the top of the Newport cliffs, they had many rebuffs, but being patient and more than willing to spend money like fifty-centa million dollar, they were well on the road to victory when—just as they were about to reach the top and trace their rises and falls throughout these ten years.

Once upon a time, as all fairy stories about beautiful princesses and chivalrous knights began, there arrived in Newport a most beautiful and gracious personage who introduced himself as Louis Bruguieres, multi-millionaire of California. Newport was then, as ever in need of good-looking, well-dowered bachelors, and Louis was taken to its breast. There were any number of unmarried girls who needed husbands, and while being taken to its breast did not necessarily mean that Newport would accept him rationally, still it helped quite a lot.

In the beginning the matron, Mrs. Peter Martin, Mrs. Hermann Goltz, Mrs. Willie Carter that was, and Mrs. Ava Whiting Astor, kept Louis to heel very cleverly. It was as though they wanted to test him out before handing him over to the "buds."

At this time Louis had no "family." He spoke rarely of his mother and his brothers and of his Western estates, but for two years he bloomed alone. Then, feeling that he was thoroughly a part of the Newport set, he announced that he intended to build a splendid mansion, bring his mother and brothers to Newport and become a really truly resident of the little State of Rhode Island.

Newport raised its eyes. "A mother? I did not know he had a mother. Did you?" asked one scandalous dame of another.

"No, I did not know it, but then, everybody does have mothers, my dear. Oh, yes, my dear, I knew that our charming Louis had a father, but he is dead."

Thus spoke Newport. And then it preserved a period of watchful waiting. It preserved it for some time Louis le Grand, as Newport now called him, did not buy his land in a hurry. He proved that he had inherited some of the sagacity of his Dutch grandfather, from whom the Bruguieres millions came.

While he was looking about, he imported his brother Emil, a bald-headed person with dreamy eyes and a noble forehead.

Emil took himself seriously. "Yes," he whispered loudly in Newport's ear, "I am a writer, a play writer, in fact. I've written—oh, many plays."

"Oh, have you?" quipped Newport. "I wonder if I have seen any of them."

(Business of looking bored on part of Emil.) "Oh, no, you have never seen any of them. They are deviate, ethereal creations, these children of my brain. I could not let them be produced before a vulgar, common crowd. They are only for the favored few. Perhaps you will let me read one to you."

Newport stood Emil just one week, and then dropped him.

"We can stand you, Louis, but not your brother. He is too intellectual for us," said Newport.

Emil got even with Newport, however. Only, alas in venturing his libel upon the almost coot Louis his foothold on Newport. A few months after his importation visit to the proud city on the cliffs, Louis sent invitations to his very dear friends to attend a first night. And it did. Louis arrived, more grand than ever, and finally, after examining every free inch of Newport land he bought several acres out in Coddington Point. Mrs. Sven approved his purchase and helped him with the plans.

"The young Lochinvar from the West has captured the cautious Laura," whispered Mrs. B—to Mrs. C—

The house was built, and just ready to be furnished when the San Francisco fire bowled Louis over, and even Newport did not see how he could "come back." It grew told to him, and Miss Sven became actually friend. Gradually, however, Mother Bruguieres realized on some properties which the Bruguieres had not touched, and the beautiful house on the bay was partially furnished.

Louis gave jolly parties. He did know how to get people to enjoy themselves.

"I think it's lovely out here," hoped Mildred Bruguieres, who was then taking Laura Sabin, a Parisian, such fun not to have to be careful of the fire.

The big dining room and hall were almost like were great places for dances and romps. And without furniture did not appeal to the William W. Siermans for their daughter, and they did their best to keep the young Lochinvar on the other side of the limit.

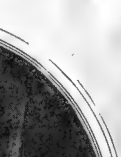

Newport decided, however, that Louis should be accepted. Was he not the owner of a million-dollar home? Was he not entertaining and handsome? "After all, we will call Louis our very own," said the daisies, and control society's receiving station.

Everything did indeed look rosy for the Bruguieres. "I've had such Newport, for the first time," Mrs. Bruguieres said, "I've had such Newport, for the first time, East and West with it." And now that the tide of domestic and social bliss enters the lady who was too beautiful.

It was a notably gay season, and the safety began early, Jimmie Van Allen came back from England. Alred Vanderbilt was just happily divorced, William P. Burden was lurching his mourning and all Newport was ready to have the time of its life. The Bruguieres were in residence in their almost-furnished house, the Astors, Belmonts, Lehrs, Carrers, Dyers et al, were also in residence. And then appeared the beautiful stranger she was tall,velte, bewitchingly beautiful and de murely lovely.

"What maternal spirit worked in the great bear none can tell. But it is certain she looked upon the little hairless thing as only another kind of cub."

CAN you picture in your mind a helpless, hairless infant being adopted and reared by a mother bear? It is not a fiction, but a fact, and it is the story of a little girl who was found in the woods of the Himalayas and who for seven years lived with wild animals.

A Dog Nursing Little Foxes. A Photograph of a Not Uncommon Manifestation of the All-Embracing Maternal Instinct in Animals.

There is a recent report of this kind in the Himalayas, and it is a story of a little girl who was found in the woods of the Himalayas and who for seven years lived with wild animals.

Contrary to general belief, a bear is naturally cheerful and good tempered. The maternal instinct is strong in the mother bear. She cherishes her two cubs with affection, and trains them up in the way they should go.

With these facts fixed in the mind it does not require a great stretch of the imagination to picture a human infant surviving and progressing into sturdy childhood as the foster "cub" of a bereaved mother bear. It should be remembered, in the first place, that bear cubs are born with very little hair on their bodies, and are the weakest and most helpless of four-footed infants.

Being thin, with no bones and washed, and calm, it is not surprising that the child proved to be of the same kind. Its skin, though deeply tanned, and its features showed plainly that it was but a human child. At once the strange creature was adopted by the bear mother, and she was able to perform the function of a mother.

There are several reasons, familiar to students of natural history, why a bear, of all animals, is the most likely to adopt a human child. The bear is a solitary animal, and it is the only animal that is not a member of a herd.

There is a stout woman with a round face that doesn't match her body, and a stout woman with a round face that does. The stout woman with a round face that doesn't match her body is a stout woman with a round face that does.

healthy animal, and the food which it feeds for the baby is with its mother in the woods. It is not a fiction, but a fact, and it is the story of a little girl who was found in the woods of the Himalayas and who for seven years lived with wild animals.

At the stage where training of the child begins, the bear mother discovers that life is not all sleeping and joyous playing. She is not a mother in the ordinary sense, but she is a mother in the sense that she is a mother.

With respect to food, this "wild child" was fortunate. The constant supply of bears in India, and on the Malay peninsula, the almost entire absence of berries and wild honey, and the fact that the bear mother is a vegetarian, all these facts are in her favor.

At this stage of its development it was captured by the strange creature who walked upright on two legs, whose ugly skin was covered with scales, and who constantly barked at her like a dog.

There Are Ten Kinds of Fat Women--Which Kind Are You?

By MARIE CAHILL, (The Famous Comedienne)

THIN women are commonplace. If a woman is thin she is this and that's all there is to it. There's no variety about her. She's just plain thin. Fat women—or stout—do have that word "fat"—are of many types, at least ten.

Every one of these women has to dress differently. To begin at the foundation, the foundation is a corset. Being of the fifth class, the woman who is relatively small but a full singer's chest, I would emphasize the upper half of my body. So, I made a corset that emphasized the chest. I came across a pair that contained the line of the hips practically to under the arms, and when I put them on I nearly cried for joy at the improvement in my appearance.

The stout woman with the short neck must make the most of every scrap of neck she has. Whatever the second class, the woman who is relatively stout, she should wear a collar. Nobody will ever miss them from her, that stout woman who has her head and body in the collar. The Dutch-necked corset is the best friend in her wardrobe. Though she cannot wear high, lacey, transparent collars that make some women look so stately and trim, she has the compensation of revealing her neck, as I have a revelation makes a woman look years younger.

The stout woman with the long neck is likely to have a thick neck, too, and this can be hidden by snug collars. Such a woman should wear her hair rather flat on top of her head. The stout woman must be dressed, I think, in that which runs, as I have said, to breadth and heaviness of hips. There is only one thing to be done, get rid of the appearance of those hips. Rolling down a great deal for the heavy hipped woman. Diet is an aid, but the heavy hands now worn tightly around them are perhaps the best. And she, less than any one, can afford to draw in her waist. Let it be as big as it likes, for if her waist be large it won't make a ridiculous contrast to her thick hips. The tight skirt she should only regard from afar off on another woman. A slight fullness about the hips will hide the blemish in her figure.

In the foreground, a large, portly man in a top hat and suit is seated in a chair, looking towards the right. To his right, another man in a top hat is falling backwards, his body arched and limbs outstretched. In the background, several other men in top hats are seated on a bench or a row of chairs. One man is holding a large stack of papers or a book. Another man is standing and looking towards the falling man. On the ground, there is a bottle and a small cup. The overall style is that of a classic political cartoon.

less there are some women who love ugly men. Although he is generally said to be a Pole by birth, he is really a Kalmuck by descent, one of a Mongolian tribe that inhabits a corner of the vast Russian Empire. His features attest this statement. He has the high cheek bones, the broad flat nose and face and the thick lips of the Mongolian race.

But in figure he belongs to the eternal type of beauty that knows no race. He is as beautiful in form as the Homeric Priapus, and his face has more beauty and desire.

It is not a Greek or a Nanking one, so strong that he can perform the most incredible exertions, and yet there are moments when his face takes the quality of a

Of all his wonderful impersonations, that of the faun is said to fit his physical beauty most perfectly. He has evoked frantic applause in "The Spectre of the Rose," in "The Dance of Prince Igor," and in "The Blue God." But when he dances as a faun, the London

The Marchioness of Ripon, a woman of remarkable beauty but mature age, recently let Nijinski escort her to the drawing room of a charity sale. Her husband is a director of the opera, and her approval of any artistic enterprise means a great deal. As soon as he reached the drawing room Nijinski was torn away from the noble Marchioness by his foolish female admirers. In their eagerness they even trod on his supple toes, which are perhaps the most precious of his charms.

"How would you like to be Nijinski?" has become a common form of greeting among frivolous young men about town. It is useless to explain to them that such an abnormal attitude toward a mere man by the other sex is very demoralizing and undesirable.

What is it in Nijinski that exercises such an extraordinary fascination? His charms appear to lie entirely in his figure. His face can hardly be an attraction, un-

PROFESSOR BIRKELAND, the famous Swedish scientist, has devised an electrical apparatus which illustrates his theory of how the universe was created. The main features of that theory, as many people know, is that the stars and planets of the whole universe are the results of electrical action. The spiral and other nebulae which the astronomers observe beyond the confines of our solar system are a form of electrical activity. They represent new solar systems, resembling ours in some degree, which are now coming into existence.

period of maximum spots. Professor Birkeland, when he first formulated his hypothesis of the sun's action, said that the sun spots were centres of emission for the clusters of very rigid cathode rays producing the Aurora Borealis and other magnetic disturbances on earth. In other words, the sun spots were the points of departure of disruptive electric discharges coming from the sun. His calculations indicate that the sun sends us its rays under an electric tension of 800,000,000 volts.

The tension of the discharge in the Professor's experiment rises before each electric eruption, while the current falls and the electric corona diminishes. Thereafter then takes place with a local deformation of the electric corona near the spots. A transient disturbance of the electric corona has been observed to be more developed in connection with the sun's spots. It is noted that at the time of minimum spots the corona of the sun spreads over a large equatorial space and shows at the poles clusters of rays in the form of a fan. The opposite occurs in years when sun spots are very numerous. The corona is then weakly developed around the equator and the poles, and has irregular found when the globe was not magnetized that luminous ramifications came from the spots taking roughly the form of star fishes. When the cathode globe was magnetized some of these ramifications revolved in spiral around the spot and near the surface.

Professor Birkeland noted while these electric spirals were going on that a luminosity ran around the equator on the cathode globe from left to right, that is to say in the same direction as the spiral.

From these experiments Professor Birkeland argues that in every solar system in course of evolution there are electro-magnetic forces capable of acting on electrified corpuscles and of drawing them together in the form of planets, revolving in nearly circular orbits, situated nearly in the same plane. Then moons and rings form, in their turn, gravitating around these planets. In the depths of space these same forces pro-

The New Furs

By Lady Duff-Gordon.

A Good Example of the Long Draped Fur Wrap That Will Be Popular This Winter.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, has just introduced a new fur wrap, which she has named "The Long Draped Fur Wrap." It is a long, flowing garment, made of the finest fur, and is designed to be worn over a dress or gown. It is a very elegant and stylish garment, and is sure to be popular this winter.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

The new fur wrap is a long, flowing garment, made of the finest fur, and is designed to be worn over a dress or gown. It is a very elegant and stylish garment, and is sure to be popular this winter. The wrap is made of a soft, plush fur, and has a long, flowing tail that reaches down to the ankles. It is fastened at the shoulders with large, ornate buckles, and has a high collar that can be turned up or down. The wrap is a very versatile garment, and can be worn in a variety of ways. It can be worn over a dress or gown, or it can be worn as a standalone garment. It is a very elegant and stylish garment, and is sure to be popular this winter.

After the long and absolute freedom from any restraint which has been our pleasant portion during sunny season of collared or low-collared bodices and blouses, and mentally agonizing, too, inasmuch as almost every woman of society and on-ward is conscious of the alteration, for the worse, of the contours of her face and chin, and nature does not want the change to be absolutely forced upon every one's notice in such a way!

So we must obviously, and all of us, make a firm stand against the threatened encroachments of the high collar, attack upon our freedom and our fascination.

You must simply decline to consider any blouse which is thus completely and designed—and then matters and modes will soon right themselves automatically.

Of course, this is an extreme case and model, but it is a forecast, and also a warning, it seems, of what we are to expect during the next season, unless our disapproval is so prompt, and firmly shown that Queen Fashion realizes the unwisdom of trying our loyalty too far. But it is also said, and significant that several other new blouse creations, which still have down-turned collars, have so curiously the usually deep V-shaped opening in front that practically all the usually becoming effect is lost. One such blouse has a collar of white tulle whose turnover joints are brought speedily and closely together in front of the neck, and there fastened with two little jet buttons. Silk cuffs to match also finish off the loose and full white chiffon sleeves at the wrist, where a touch of narrow black moire ribbon is also added, and, for the rest, the blouse is fashioned of white Jap silk veiled with chiffon, a somewhat curious adornment being added in front in the way of a very broad band of golden yellow velvet ribbon, softened, at first, by a veil of the chiffon, it eventually showing all its brightness, and being topped over at the waist, where it is held in position by dainty folded bows of black moire.

Raising Bats to Cure Malaria

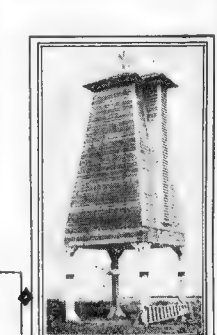

How Texas Has Put a Closed Season on the Ugly Little Flyers to Enable Them to Eat Up the Disease-Carrying Mosquitoes

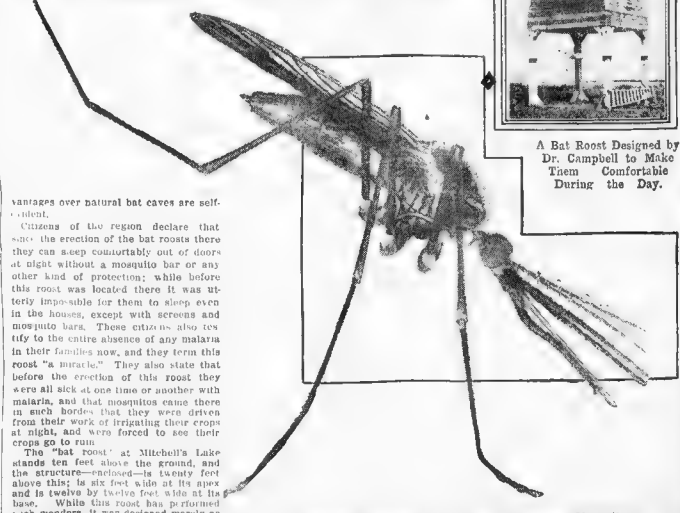

Enlarged Head of a Bat, Showing the Delicate Hairs About the Mouth That Act as Mosquito Traps.

A FERTILE, closed season on bats has been declared in Texas, as a result of recent reports from the United States Department of Agriculture, which state that the bats are the most efficient of mosquito eaters, and that they are the only animals that are not affected by the disease of malaria. It is now realized, however, that the bat is one of man's best friends and ought to be carefully cultivated. The extermination of malaria is promised if bats are not killed in sufficient numbers and their bodies are a much needed source of food for the passage of the disease. and the countless billions of mosquitoes that this place has furnished in the past, amply proves this assertion. The roost was finished on April 1, 1911. Before looking the roost, the inside was sprayed with a chemical fluid which gives off an odor identical with the natural odor of the bat, and without which chemical fluid the bats cannot be colonized. Twenty-five pounds of fresh guano were then spread in the upper of the roost, and in four months it is tenanted by a colony of bats at this time by these odors. The next year, the roost is again so full of bats that it took several hours to clean out, and they are so thick that in the sunlight they resembled a cloud and gave the roost the appearance of being on fire. The roost is now full of bats.

A Bat Roost Designed by Dr. Campbell to Make Them Comfortable During the Day.

An Enlarged Photograph of the Malarial-carrying Mosquito.

Advantages over natural bat caves are self-evident. Citizens of the region declare that since the erection of the bat roosts there they can sleep comfortably out of doors at night without a mosquito bar or any other kind of protection, while before this roost was located there it was utterly impossible for them to sleep even in the houses, except with screens and mosquito bars. These citizens also testify to the entire absence of any malaria in their families now, and they term this roost "a miracle." They also state that before the erection of this roost they were all sick at one time or another with malaria, and that mosquitoes came there in such hordes that they were driven from their work of irrigating their crops at night, and were forced to see their crops go to ruin.

The "bat roost" at Mitchell's Lake stands ten feet above the ground, and the structure—measuring—twenty feet above this; is six feet wide at its apex and is twelve by twelve feet wide at its base. While this roost has performed such wonders, it was designed merely as a model; the intention being to construct

To Promote Peace and Prosperity, Happiness and Security, WAS and IS Our Obligation, BOTH in Europe and Mexico.

A reader of the AMERICAN writes to ask why it is that the AMERICAN so vigorously favors peace in the present European situation, when it but lately favored with equal vigor intervention in Mexico.

A motto of the AMERICAN is that it is "A paper for people who think," and if our correspondent had done himself and us the justice to think he could have answered this question for himself.

The AMERICAN favors mediation in Europe for exactly the same reason that it favored intervention in Mexico—TO ESTABLISH PEACE AND CIVILIZED CONDITIONS.

There had existed in Europe for a long period peace and happiness, prosperity and security.

The war immediately plunged Europe into a condition of murder and anarchy. Prosperity has been destroyed there, security has been ended, organized murder and misery and devastation have taken the place of human happiness and peaceful pursuits.

The AMERICAN is laboring now and always to suppress savagery, and promote peace and progress and civilized conditions.

For a long period in Mexico, however, there had been not peace and prosperity, but anarchy and murder, destruction and devastation, misery and poverty, robbery and outrage.

Not only had the Mexicans themselves suffered in this protracted period of anarchy and savagery, but the citizens of all foreign nations had suffered even more.

Hundreds of American men had been murdered in the most cold-blooded and cruel manner.

American women had been outraged, American children had been slain, American property had been pillaged, American refugees were flying in hunted herds from the country, leaving behind them all that they possessed and all that they had labored years to secure, leaving behind them too often also the burned and mutilated bodies of those nearest and dearest to them.

These stricken refugees claimed pitifully the protection of this great country, a protection which had been definitely and specifically promised to them in the Democratic platform, upon which this present Democratic government was elected, a protection which, with or without promise, is guaranteed to its citizens by every self respecting and civilized, even semi-civilized, government on the face of the earth.

There was no end to this murder and anarchy, no limit to this devastation and destruction.

The AMERICAN favored, and still favors and will always favor, ACTION on the part of this great and powerful nation of ours to protect its own people from murder and robbery and to restore peace and order and civilized conditions in Mexico.

This newspaper labored for the restoration of peace and civilized conditions in Mexico, exactly as it is laboring today for the restoration of peace and civilized conditions in Europe.

The remedy urged for this evil of murder and anarchy was not the same in both cases and is not the same, BUT THE OBJECT—THE RESTORATION OF PEACE AND HAPPINESS—WAS THE SAME.

The Democratic party adopted a policy of watchful waiting, which in other words is merely a policy of indolent indifference, a policy of not fulfilling the pledges of its platform, a policy of not performing its duty to its own citizens, its obligations to society and to civilization.

The Democratic leaders no doubt conscientiously believed that the Mexican situation would solve itself, and that when Huerta was deposed peace would automatically be restored.

But this conscientious belief was based on consummate ignorance of actual conditions, as, unfortunately, most of the Democratic policies are.

Plunder is too profitable, for those who are doing the plundering, readily to be abandoned. Murder and outrage only too easily become viciously enjoyable habits.

There never was in all this period of murder and anarchy in Mexico a genuine revolution in our understanding of the term. There was merely the rebellion of one faction against the authority of another faction, and ultimately a rebellion of all factions against all authority.

What has just happened in Mexico—another revolution—is exactly what everybody, except the Democratic watchful waiters, knew would happen; and what everybody knows will continue to happen until the United States does its duty and restores peace and order and governmental protection to life and property in this neighboring republic.

Revolt will succeed rebellion, and rebellion will succeed revolution and riot and red murder will reign unchecked and unchallenged until at length the United States under some wiser government shall perform its plain duty to its own citizens and to civilization, or else some other country, weary of the United States' negligence and indifference, shall step in and do the work which this country, by its inherited policies and natural position, ought properly to do.

On November 17, 1913, I wrote for this newspaper:

"The United States should intervene in Mexico, but there is only one course that it can pursue either honorably or effectively, either with proper regard for its obligations to its own citizens, or with sufficient repressive effect on the state of anarchy prevailing in Mexico.

"That course is to occupy Mexico and restore it to a state of CIVILIZATION by means of American MEN and American METHODS.

"That course is for the United States itself not some incompetent and unrepresentative Mexican faction to re-establish PEACE and ORDER and CIVILIZED PROCEDURE in Mexico for the proper protection of our own citizens and for the best benefit of all honest and worthy Mexican citizens."

In the American of April 27, 1914, I wrote:

"MURDER in Mexico must cease; DESTRUCTION and DEVASTATION must end. It is our duty and our destiny to END ANARCHY in Mexico and to dedicate and devote Mexican territory to the cause of ENLIGHTENMENT and CIVILIZATION."

Again in an interview in the Berlin Vossische-Zeitung on June 11, 1914, I said:

"The COMPLETE ANARCHY in Mexico, lasting for several years, has been injurious to the interests of our country as a whole and disastrous and destructive to the lives and property of our citizens in Mexico. General Sherman said: 'WAR IS HELL.' But ANARCHY IS ALSO HELL. In fact, anarchy is worse than war, as it is more protracted and more wholly unregulated by the rules and restrictions of civilized warfare. A great many Americans have been murdered; some have been tortured and burned to death; American women have been violated; American children have been slain—many things have happened worse than many things that could happen in war.

"Our people believe that it is time to PUT AN END TO THE ANARCHICAL CONDITIONS prevailing in Mexico."

On November 17, 1913, I wrote:

"The proposal to install one or another of the contending Mexican factions in control of the Mexican government offers no prospect either of peace to Mexico or of protection to the citizens of the United States.

"ANY ONE FACTION INSTALLED IN POWER WOULD IMMEDIATELY ENCOUNTER THE ARMED OPPOSITION OF EVERY OTHER FACTION THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY."

These articles and interviews were uttered in the interests of peace and order and civilized conditions in MEXICO.

The articles on the European situation which are appearing from time to time in the AMERICAN at present are written in the hope of restoring peace and happiness and civilized conditions in EUROPE.

On the 15th of this month I wrote, in reference to the condition of murder and anarchy in Europe, the following lines:

"Let us have peace" and let this great American nation exercise its power and influence in behalf of humanity and human progress.

"For reasons of selfish interest as well as of human interest it is America's duty to exert its utmost influence to conserve and unite under the banners of peace and progress the forces of civilization.

"Let us raise our voices so loudly and exercise our influence so strongly that Europe will be compelled to stop for a moment and to listen to the voice of reason; to the appeal of humanity; to consider for a moment not merely our interests, but their own interests, THE INTERESTS OF ALL CIVILIZATION—the best interests of the WHOLE HUMAN RACE."

Are not these words in complete harmony with the following sentiments expressed on April 27, 1914, in relation to the MEXICAN condition of murder and anarchy:

"Our people are anxious to end the state of anarchy in Mexico and to end it for the BENEFIT OF THE CITIZENS OF ALL NATIONS and FOR CIVILIZATION AS A WHOLE. They are anxious to RESTORE PEACE AND ORDER in a country which is at our door and for which we are in a sense morally responsible as well, under our construction of the Monroe Doctrine, politically responsible. We are anxious to perform OUR FULL OBLIGATION TO SOCIETY AND TO CIVILIZATION as the guardian of this western hemisphere. We are anxious to make this adjoining country even as the United States is a haven of PEACE AND SECURITY for our own people and for ALL THE PEOPLE OF THE WORLD."

Finally is not the above utterance relative to Mexico in absolute accord with the appeal for European peace which I cabled a week ago to Lord Northcliffe of the London Times, and Lord Burnham of the London Daily Telegraph, and which concluded in these words:

"Can we not appeal to the people of our own countries and to the press and people of all countries, to make one mighty, united effort to compel peace and restore HAPPINESS AND CIVILIZED CONDITIONS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE WORLD."

The same sentiment is expressed in all of these articles; the same object is sought for in all of them and almost the same words are employed in all of them.

The duty of our government and of our people and of these newspapers is to do their utmost to end conditions of murder and anarchy in EUROPE and restore peace and happiness to the distressed peoples there, and the duty of our government, of our people and of these newspapers was, and still is, to do their utmost to end conditions of murder and anarchy in MEXICO and restore peace and happiness to those people and protection to our own people in that distressed country as well.

Our aim is always peace, but peace is an empty word unless it grants and guarantees happiness and prosperity and security to all.

Instead of joining the ranks of this year's debutantes here, Miss Dorothy Tenney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Tenney of No. 388 Marlboro street and Macoun, has elected a collegiate career, and ten days ago made a host of her girl friends a good-bye before leaving to join the Vassar freshman class.

Many of Miss Tenney's schoolgirl chums and acquaintances are numbered upon the debutante roll for the winter. Miss Dorothy is proficient in athletics, having won the prize for athletics at the Vassar School where she graduated last year, and he it known that this honor includes merit in gymnasium, basket ball and hockey.

MRS. MARGARET CARTER STUART

MRS. THOMAS LEWIS EDWARDS

share of comment. When his young English coachman does not bring him to the depot or drive handsome at night, Mrs. Stockton, looking very youthful, has the ribbon or is at the wheel of their motor car to share that part of her husband's daily travel with him.

Young George von L. Meyer of Hamilton "goes to work every day" in Boston, learning banking under the tutelage of Leo, Higginson & Co.

Dr. Maynard Laid is a daily traveler from Manchester. He keeps his motor car at a garage near the depot. Each morning and evening he is his own chauffeur to and from Smith's Point.

J. A. Lowell Blake is another commuter, who gives expression to his sartorial fastidiousness by wearing white gloves.

Henry Davis Sleeper, too, I have seen on the train with the same dainty hand coverings.

Henry Clay Price, when in health, has made weekly business trips every week each summer to New York and Pittsburgh to keep in touch with his great interests. To be sure, he travels in a luxurious private car, but the business attire is enfolded in the luxury, but he adheres to the same parsimony as to all great capitalists of industry whose lives spell great wealth.

Dr. George H. Washburn may not travel every day on a train, but there is no more active figure in the professional world of North Shore than this famous physician. Always in a high-powered automobile, his trusted chauffeur at the wheel, he is met every day early and late on his rounds among his fashionable patients, the tireless doctor, who never calls his time his own.

PEACE, THE SNOWBALL IN HELL, by David Barnes-Griffiths—Reprinted from the Boston Transcript by permission

Making one's way to Constantinople on the first Saturday of August the International Church Peace Union was to hold a preliminary conference, was no harder work than it was to remain in attendance when the headquarters had been reached. This, notwithstanding the fact that the war with Russia, in ending, there were enough signs of peace to make the American traveler feel at home and at ease, and to reflect on the enormous width of the Atlantic Ocean, comfortably warmed and fed at the hotel table, the delegates nevertheless found themselves wistful for other places. The hotel occupies a fine chief building an ancient monastery, and for its high dining room an old council hall, the scene of the famous convocation of Italian and French representatives. Here, also, John Huss faced his accusers and gave up his life. It was permitted us to reflect that if the fifteenth century reformer could not achieve a truce from Constantinople, the unworthy did. The conference, opening on Saturday evening, held three sessions on Sunday. Early on Monday morning eighty of the English and American delegates were at the hotel, and the delegates were at a dinner table not dreading trip down the Rhine valley and to the Dutch border. While, as Huss assures us, a gentleman never perishes, there are times when he has to die mightily to find the wheels-of-fate slow at the border. There, a soulful divine had inquired, by way of English greeting, "Do you feel the spirit of John Huss this morning?" For answer, a neighbor asked him, "Do you feel the spirit of John Huss?"

TALKING PEACE TO THE SOUTH. The receipt of the committee in London, the day after the conference, was a surprise. It was the receipt of representatives of the Protestant churches of Europe and America, should be vastly admired. The corresponding Catholic organizations chose the same date, and held the same point of rendezvous. A peace conference of the kind is held in some place corner of the planet every year, and the world's peace is assured to the tinkling of the organ. At Constantinople, the war's deliberations went to the wind of the drums. Soldiers almost under your windows marching "to and fro," and the "Wacht am Rhein," and school children singing the same. Churches, crowded with patriots who listen to temperate and reasonable sermon, not without acknowledgment of national shortcomings.

William S. Kennelly of the Gata of Heaven parish, accompanied by John Shanahan, his cousin, departed last night for Baltimore. Mr. Kennelly will prepare for the Paschal order. Mr. Kennelly was formerly an altar boy of the date of Heaven Church, and Mr. Shanahan was a prominent member of St. Patrick's parish, Brooklyn.

Gala Hallow E'en Promised

Society is busily discussing the coming Hallow-e'en party of the Abbotsford Club which is to be held at Hotel Somerset.

James M. Morrison, president of the club, is arranging many novel features to be included in the evening's program.

It is expected that several hundred of the city's Catholic society will be present.

The Abbotsford Club has been meeting at the various members' houses during Winter months and enjoying bridge and constructive work. The last meeting of the club was held at the Summer home of Mrs. James M. Morrison of Hull, and there plans were started for the coming function.

Mrs. Joseph S. Doherty, who has been summing at Scituate, will entertain the members in a few weeks' time, and all preparations will be fully completed.

DAILY INDUSTRIAL AID HOLDS MEETING TODAY.

The regular meeting of the Daily Industrial Aid Club will be held this afternoon in the Daily Industrial School Hall. Arrangements will be made for their annual dance in the hall which will take place in the fall or early Winter months.

Not a so-called animal dance, even the Fox Trot is conservative. Even the most daring of the dancers do not leave the floor except in the pivot and the cross-step.

The girls' mothers will act as maids of honor, and the party is a merry evening is expected.

Miss Marie Altes and Mrs. Souter

Illustrated this new dance.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Presented by the Hearst Sunday Newspapers in Collaboration with the Famous Pathe Players in a Photo-Play Serial Novel

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Stanford Marvin, a wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, has been almost cut by overwork. His son, Harry, and his adopted daughter, Pauline, love each other but she wants two years of thrilling experiences before she marries him. Her reason is that she is ambitious to be a writer. Old Mr. Marvin asks to see what she has written. While Pauline and Harry are in search of a magazine containing her story, Mr. Marvin spins the case of a mummy which has just arrived from Egypt. Raymond Owen, his rascally private secretary, helps lift off the front of the case, but leaves the old man to remove the mummy's bandages alone. Mr. Marvin, during a fainting spell sees the half-exposed mummy come to life, step out of her case, take a bracelet from her wrist and try to force it into his services grasp while her lips whisper a strange message from the remote past.

Restored to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man believes it to be a dream until later he finds the identical bracelet on the mummy's skeleton wrist. He promises Pauline one year to see life, and places her in the guardianship of Owen. A final heart attack gives him just time to write on the doctor's prescription blank a word which then he dies. A lawyer tells Owen that he would have permanent care of Pauline's estate if something should happen to her before marriage. Owen conspires with villainous characters to have Pauline killed. Balhazar, the Gypsy chief, allies himself with Owen. The preceding chapters have dealt with the many efforts of the two to accomplish Pauline's end.

"I thought you promised!" thundered Harry.
"I know," said Pauline, but that was all she said.
"What does that nonsense mean?"
"I bought the car and—entered for the race—before—"
"Before?"
"Before I promised not to."
He stopped his wild pacing of the library to look down upon her in her leather chair with a gaze that bespoke all the masculine bewilderment of all the ages over the mystery of women.
"And so you are going to drive an automobile in the International Cross Country?"
"Yes, dear boy. Why shouldn't I?"
"After all you promised—not to risk your life again unless I was with you?"
"But—don't you see—I promised to go into the race before I promised—not to." He collapsed in a chair across the room from her.
"There it is on the card," she advanced quickly to his defeat. "Doesn't it say that I have paid $100 and agreed to enter Car No. 634 in the international race?"
"But it doesn't say you have to DO it," he cried.
"It seems to me a matter of honor. If I backed out they might think—they might think that I was afraid."
"I wish you were. Where did you get the car?"
"Bought it. That is, I had the bill sent to Owen, or you, or somebody. I am so tired of the Marvin cars. I got a racer. Oh, Harry, it's just a beauty!"
He sprung to his feet. "I tell you, Polly, I will NOT approve of it. I will NOT see you do these insane things any longer."
Meanwhile he had brought forth his wrath at the precocious impudent moment. Raymond Owen was just entering the library. Harry blazed on. "Owen, look here," he cried. "I am going to have these things stopped. I am going."
"You had better ask Owen his opinion first," suggested Pauline jolly.
"That's what I'm doing. Owen, she is trying to go into the International Cross Country Auto race—going to drive a machine herself. I want you to tell her that she will be forcibly restrained if this madness continues. I want you!"
Owen raised his hands in mimic astonishment at Harry's vehemence.
"You know I surrendered long ago," he said, smiling. "My guardianship was obliterated almost before it began. My ward declined to have a guardian."
"Oh, no, indeed," said Pauline gravely. "I respect your opinion, Owen. I do everything that you advise—if I want to do it. But I don't see why Harry should assume that HE has authority over me."
"I don't assume authority. I am appealing to your reason. You're going to be killed. You can't drive a car away. You run into everything you see. What's going to happen if you get hold of the wheel of a racer in the international cup?"

"I'm going to win the race—that is what will happen," announced Pauline. She rose angrily. Harry was on his feet following, protesting. But she sped up the stairs without deigning even a backward look, and he knew his defeat was utter.
He went out on the veranda. Owen passed him there.
"Really, I don't believe it's any use protesting Mr. Marvin," the secretary said. "You and I have tried it for many months in vain. She will have her way in spite of us, and it seems to me better that we know what she does and can be there to protect her."
"You talk like a fool—or like something else," exclaimed Harry. His suspicions of the secretary had by no means been dispelled by Owen's fulsome rejoinders over the escape from the sealed wall of the ruined factory.
Harry went back into the house. Owen, without a word of reply, moved down through the garden. He took the main path to the road gate, lingered there, smoking his cigar, for several minutes; then, as if by a leisure whim, moved out into the road. If anyone had been watching him, the watcher would have noticed that the secretary kept a keen eye on the bordering undergrowth of the road as he moved slowly along the hedge wall of the estate—moved back toward the wooded grounds, toward the little gate in the forest-chained park. Owen was as timid as he was heartless. But the sudden sound of a voice from the bushes by the roadside did not in the least disturb his composure.
"I am here, Master," said the voice.
"Shall I speak with you?"
It was the voice of the Gypsy, Balhazar. Owen stopped and looked up and down the road. He moved slowly to the side of the road and bent for a moment over a wild rose bush. As he went on into the twilight of the forest he carried, almost carelessly in his hypocritical hand a blossom from the rose bush.
He dropped it as Balhazar faced him.
"I have the machine down the road, Master. I have also your cap and coat. Shall we go?"
"Of course," answered Owen.
They took a route deep into the woods, but the paths which Balhazar knew brought them quickly to an automobile that stood a quarter of a mile down the main turnpike between Castle Marvin and Westbury.
"Will Ferrari be there?" asked Owen, as he stepped into the machine.
"He never fails."
"Except when he is drinking," commented Owen. He took the wheel and Balhazar sat beside him.
"So even when you had them bricked up to the wall you couldn't get rid of them," said Owen coldly.
"Master, no man can oppose Fate. Besides, that young Marvin is in league with the Devil."
"Rubbish! The trouble is that you are in league with Mammon. You want money—and there more money. It is your profit to let that young man ruin Pauline. Balhazar, and then I understand you."
"Master, you are wrong. Who could have dreamed that an aeroplane would nail upon the factory?"

"Some one might have stayed to see that."
"But you have ordered there shall be no direct murder."
"For the girl, yes. For Harry Marvin—I want that man killed. There will never be chance of getting rid of Pauline until he is killed. Anything to do him."
"Ferrari will be of supreme service, Master."
"What will he do?"
"Ferrari will do anything that you command, Master—you know that. You have known him long. You suggested the rapier. That is what I told him."
"The rapier will do if he can arrange the fight."
"But, Master, tell me, has this man—this Harry Marvin—learned the skill of fence? Is it certain that Ferrari can kill him?"
"Marvin can fight. I remember paying his bills to a fencing master in Vienna and another to Rome. But he is out of all practical. I know Ferrari. Ferrari will be able to handle the fighting. The question is whether or not he can properly arrange the fight."
"There was the time in Naples."
"We will discuss the point when the present is over."
"Very well, Master."
They drove through Brooklyn and turned across the Queensboro bridge into the middle East Side. Owen stopped the car at the first corner.
"Can you watch this machine for a few minutes?" he asked of the policeman on the corner at the same time drawing a persuasive $5 note from his wallet.
"I'll see if I can," said the policeman, pocketing the bribe. Owen and Balhazar moved swiftly along the street. In front of a towering tenement Balhazar stopped.
"This is the place, Master," he said.
They walked up the interior stairs to the fourth floor and the gray rapped entry in the darkness upon a door.
"The face of a man, shadowed and furrowed from the use of liquor, appeared in the dim aperture."
"Ah, Bernardo! It is an old friend; once the door." There was a long pause, a persuasion and command in the subtle voice of Owen.
"What is his name?" asked Ferrari in a whisper.
"Raymond Owen."
The man swung the door wide and extended his hand to the Secretary.
"You have remembered my letter? You have work for me to do?" he questioned eagerly.
"I have been a long time remembering your letter, Bernardo. When I had nothing

Some more Gypses to capture us," said Pauline.
"Did you ever take anything seriously in your life?" he demanded.
"Did you ever take anything seriously in your life?" he demanded.
They went out upon the road.
Balhazar, the Gypsy, with his appearance completely converted a blond moustache and dyed eyebrows, a large black hat pulled close over his head—was moving slowly up the road with Ferrari.
"Excellent," breathed Ferrari, just loudly enough to be heard by Harry and Pauline. "Have you ever fought a woman so beautiful?"
Harry's eyes flashed fire instantly. He and Pauline were not more than ten feet from the men. He glanced at Pauline, her face was crimson. And yet the words of Ferrari, who was dressed in an ancient frock coat and reached in a manner of staidness, seemed hardly to warrant a rebuke.
But as they passed, Ferrari suddenly withdrew from the side of his companion and stepped inactively next to Pauline. He stood, looking into her eyes. She drew back with a cry that was echoed by the rest of Ferrari as Harry's fast sent him sprawling across the road.
Ferrari got to his feet slowly, guardedly. Harry and taken Pauline's arm and they had turned back toward the estate. Ferrari rushed after them.
"I demand an apology," he shouted. "I am the Count Emilio Di Ferranti. I demand an apology."
Harry walked on with Pauline, but kept a watchful eye upon the intruder.
Ferrari seized Harry's arm. "Did you hear me? I have been insulted; I present my card," he cried hotly.
Again Harry sprang at him, but the blow subsided. Ferrari was taking no more chances. He and Balhazar followed closely however.
At the gate of the estate Harry said to Pauline: "Run; get to the telephone and tell the police of Westbury."
She sped up the broad walk.
"Now," said Harry, turning to the two men, "what have either of you—or both of you—to say to me?"
"That it must be settled on the spot of honor. I demand a duel. You have insulted me. You have struck me. Here is my card."
Harry glanced at the rather grimy bit of paper that the man thrust into his hands. He tore it in two and threw it into the dust.
"Can't you do better?" he asked.
"You will hear from me again. And, seize the rapier of Balhazar, he arose and hastily down the road. They had gone but a few paces when Harry still standing at the gate, saw them break into a run and spring suddenly off the road and into the bushes.
He ran to the bushes, as he moved up the path to the house. "Yes, it must be another place. Thank heaven, they have begun to attack me instead of Pauline."

Harry was hurrying from the Marvin building to his car.
"Get away from here," said Harry, at the wheel.
"Go on, beat it!"
But the grimy archer who had run to Harry's side as he emerged from the building, in a twinkling of an eye, was in the car.
"A letter for the gentleman," he said with a softly modulated accent.
"Wait a minute," said Harry. But the child had fled like a will of the wind down the street toward West Broadway and was quickly lost in the hurrying throng.
Harry opened the letter. He read:
"Sir: In my own country an affair could be settled without interference by the police. Here we must move with caution. If you are still unafraid, meet me at Watkins' Grove at dawn tomorrow. I will bring the weapons."
BENARD FERRARI.
Care Gault House.

Harry put the letter in his pocket and got into the machine.
"Do you think I could still handle a rapier?" he asked of Pauline, as she ran out to meet him at the garage of Castle Marvin.
"I hope not," she said. "You used to brag so about the way you could fence when you were in college that you drove me to despair. And yet you never killed a single person. It was ridiculous."
"I am challenged to fight a duel," he proclaimed with infinite solemnity.
Her eyes widened with delight. "Do you mean it?" she gasped.
"Indeed I do; read this." He presented the letter of Ferrari. She read it eagerly.
"Glorious! Wonderful! How perfectly fascinating!" she cried.
"You bloodthirsty little wretch!" he said. "Do you think I would?"
"All men of honor must fight when they are challenged," she declared.
"When they are challenged by men of honor—not when they are challenged by a man who insults a woman and is thrashed for it."

"Is THAT the man?"
"Certainly."
"How utterly lovely! I'm loosed so shabby and—and—distinguished. But of course, you won't hit him," she asked anxiously.
"No, because I won't fight him."
Pauline drew away with a look of innocent amazement.
"You mean that you would refuse a challenge to a duel?" she asked breathlessly.
"That kind of a challenge—yes."
She looked him in the eyes. She moved close to him. "I—well, let—you—revenge it," she declared.

"You want me to fight?"
"I insist that you fight. I wish hear of nothing else. You can wound him with a rapier of your sword and then tell him how silly he was to fight a real duellist—and let him go away."
Harry turned from her with an explosion of laughter.
"Well, my life be upon your hands," he cried. "I'm going to do it now."
"YOU WILL!"
"Under one condition. I offer you a bargain. Let me drive the new machine in the International Race and I'll fight this bully."

Pauline was silent.
"You want to be the duelist, of course. I'll consent to that. It will be a new and thrilling experience for you. Just say the word, and!"
"Yes, I agree," said Pauline. "If you let me be your mechanic and ride in the race with you."
Harry raised his hands hopelessly. "Is that the only alternative?"
"Yes," said Pauline.
"Very well; I accept it."
"And you will fight the duel with me as your second?"
"Yes."
"Oh, you are GRAND—you're the grandest thing in the world," she cried. "But, of course," she added, anxiously, "you won't kill him, will you?"
"No," said Harry. "He is going to kill me."

He sat down at the table and wrote a note to Ferrari. He called the butler. By telegraph, he said.
